6: Sauer--111-112 G-5 (1785-94) 1802 Yakut
116, 174, 578

"The first intelligence that Russia obtained of these people was in 1620, when they were discovered by the Cossacs that inha-[112]bited the Mangazey. At that time they were divided into many tribes; and the dissensions that existed among them contributed to their being subdued."

19: Kharuzin -- 42-43 E-4 (no date) 1898 Yakut
116, 462, 562, 578, 614, 837

If the husband beat his wife without good reason, from the point of view of the Yakuts, she has the right to complain to the clan government or to apply for protection to the Natives'Court. The husband is not oblidged to maintain fidelity; he can abandon his wife, live in another place, cohabit with another woman. The wife, on the contrary, must preserve fidelity, although occasional relations with other men, if they take place with the consent of the husband, are regarded by the Yakuts with complete indifference. [43] Although at the present time the personal position of the wife in relation to her husband has changed for the better, in comparison with the past, to her lot, nevertheless, continues to fall the most arduous domestic labor. Except where the family is rich, or the wife is richer than the husband, the duties of the woman include more than the care of the household; the care of the cattle, the making of cheese and butter, the painting of the yurt, and often even the mowing of hay, cutting of wood, etc., if the husband cannot manage the other jobs by himself.